

TWO DEAD FROM DRUNKEN ORGIE

Men Succumb to Effects of Wood Alcohol Mixed with Whiskey—Another One of Party Is Dying.

FOUR HAD PLANNED DELIBERATE DEBAUCH.

Hired Basement and Laid In Liquor—Police Notified of Their Condition by Man with Delirium Tremens.

Two men are dead, one dying and a fourth missing is the net result to-day of a jamboree that the quartet started on Sunday afternoon. They mixed wood alcohol with whiskey. The dead were: William Kelly, thirty-two years old, of Bridgeport, Conn., and a man of the name of Gray, whose Christian name is not yet known, of New Britain, Conn.

The dying man is Daniel McCarthy, thirty years old, of Springfield, Mass., and the missing one is Paul McKenna. He, it is believed, will be found dead somewhere in the streets or in a vacant lot.

The four men knew each other. That is, they were what might be termed acquaintances. They met recently, and as no one had any work, they decided to go on a jamboree. They hired the basement of No. 20 East One Hundred and Seventeenth street from Mrs. Rosa Webber Sunday afternoon. There were a stove, some cooking utensils and two beds in the place.

As soon as the men moved in they proceeded to get all the alcohol in their systems that they would permit. They bought a half dozen bottles of whiskey and a bottle of wood alcohol at Wolfert's drug store in the neighborhood.

It was a quiet jamboree. No one in the house heard a sound from the basement. Perhaps the quartet was too drunk to make any noise.

Woman Notices Police.

The first that the police knew of the orgie was when McCarthy went into the East One Hundred and Seventeenth street police station. Sergeant Maglin was behind the desk. McCarthy was wild-eyed and had all the symptoms of a man with delirium tremens.

"For God's sake, Cap," he said, "send a doctor around to No. 20 East One Hundred and Seventeenth street. They are all dead."

"All dead?" the sergeant exclaimed. "What do you mean?"

McCarthy collapsed without giving any further information. The sergeant got busy.

In a few minutes an ambulance from Eastern Hospital was at the station house. Dr. Lawrence bundled McCarthy into the ambulance. Detectives O'Neill and Liscom jumped in also, and the horse was sent flying to East One Hundred and Seventeenth street.

Dead and Living Side by Side.

Gray was found unconscious and Kelly dead. They were lying on the floor side by side, with an empty whiskey bottle between them. The place was in a filthy condition.

Dr. Lawrence examined Kelly first. "He is dead," he said, and then he turned to Gray. At first he thought that he, too, was dead, but there was still a little life left. Gray was put in the ambulance beside McCarthy, who had become unconscious. McCarthy was carried into the hospital. As the driver and one of the detectives lifted Gray out of the ambulance on a stretcher he gasped and died.

The doctors worked for two hours over McCarthy before he regained his senses sufficiently to tell anything like a coherent story of the orgie.

The physicians say that he hasn't a chance in a thousand of pulling through. Wood alcohol is a deadly poison. The bottle that the man had purchased the stuff in was plainly labelled "Poison."

Mr. Webster, who rented the basement to the four men, said that he knew nothing about them. Yesterday one of the men had borrowed some sugar from her, saying that they were making a cup of tea.

BIG DOG RESCUES A DROWNING BOY

Saw Him Struggling in the Water and Swam to Him Before He Could Sink, and Thus Saved His Life.

Arnold Roberts, the eight-year-old son of Capt. James Roberts, of the bark Aetna, and Graustark, his big Newfoundland dog, would not be together to-day and happy if things had gone as they had been ordered by the boy's parents.

The father sailed yesterday on a long voyage, and it was his intention to take the dog to sea, as the home on Staten Island was to be closed and Arnold sent away to boarding school.

The youngster begged his parents not to separate him from his companion, but his father would not give in, and it was with his heart broken that he went down to the wharf and saw Graustark and the Captain start for the Aetna in a small boat.

Graustark didn't want to go, but there was no way of getting around it, and he saw his young master getting smaller and smaller on the end of the wharf as the boat drew further and further away. Suddenly he snatched up a small arm waving wildly in the water. With a yelp Graustark was overboard and to the rescue.

He reached Arnold just in time, and when the dog and boy were pulled out of the water the faithful animal was nearly near done.

Capt. Roberts returned to the shore and when he was satisfied that his son was all right he told him that he was going to leave Graustark behind. You might all overboard again, Arnold, and you'll need him," said the Aetna's master, and he hurried off to his vessel to make the tide.

The four men knew each other. That is, they were what might be termed acquaintances. They met recently, and as no one had any work, they decided to go on a jamboree. They hired the basement of No. 20 East One Hundred and Seventeenth street from Mrs. Rosa Webber Sunday afternoon. There were a stove, some cooking utensils and two beds in the place.

WOMAN FALLS ON RED-HOT STOVE

So Badly Burned That She Is Likely to Die—Her Husband
Found Her Lying Face Downward.

Mrs. Margaret McGowan was seriously burned by falling across a heated stove in the kitchen of her home at No. 553 West Twenty-sixth street early to-day and her life is despaired of by physicians at the Roosevelt Hospital.

Mrs. McGowan, being blind in one eye, did not see that she was so near the stove.

Mrs. McGowan was preparing a meal. Her husband heard her screams, and running into the kitchen found her lying face downward on the hot stove. She had fallen in such a way that she could not rise.

The woman's clothing was ablaze and her head was badly burned, as were her arms and breast, before her husband could pull her from the stove and put out the flaming dress. An ambulance was called and she was taken to the hospital.

FELL FROM FREIGHT CARS.

Brakeman's Legs Crushed and Afterwards Amputated.

Robert Cartart, of No. 116 Clinton street, Hoboken, a brakeman on the D. & W. Railroad, received a fatal injury in the Hoboken yards to-day. He was riding on top of a freight car, fell off and his legs were crushed at the hips.

The man was removed to St. Mary's Hospital, where his legs were amputated. His wife and three children were sent for to see him before he died. The Cartart family had been making preparations for a Christmas celebration.

A GRATEFUL CLERGYMAN.

Rev. Wm. H. Shaw, of the South Primitive Methodist Church, New Bedford, Mass., says: "I have used Father John's Medicine in my family with excellent results, as have many of my parishioners to whom I have recommended it."

Mrs. Webster, who rented the basement to the four men, said that he knew nothing about them. Yesterday one of the men had borrowed some sugar from her, saying that they were making a cup of tea.

CIVIL WAR NURSE KILLED BY CANCER

Mrs. O'Hagan Went Through
Every Engagement with Her Husband and Saved His Colonel's Life by Careful Attention

Mrs. Ann O'Hagan, sixty-one years old, widow of Henry O'Hagan, is dead at her residence, No. 33 Washington avenue, Belleville, N. J., after an illness of about five months. Death was due to cancer.

Mrs. O'Hagan went through the civil war with her husband, who was a member of Company G, Thirty-first New York Volunteers. She discharged all the duties of a nurse, though not formally engaged as one.

During the Seven Days' battle the Colonel of her husband's regiment, Calvin S. Pratt, of Brooklyn, was seriously wounded by being shot in the mouth. Mrs. O'Hagan nursed him until he completely recovered.

All through the war Mrs. O'Hagan accompanied her husband and patiently endured the attendant discomforts. During the battle of Gettysburg a man who was thought to be her husband was brought to her tent dead. Her joy was immeasurable when upon examination the body proved to be that of a stranger.

Her husband was killed in the Hendricks campaign while he was falling from a ladder on which he was working.
